Sheila Hicks (born in 1934 in Hastings, USA; lives and works in Paris since the 1960's)

Since the late 1950s, Sheila Hicks has been producing work exceptionally difficult to categorise. Knotting, wrapping, folding, twisting and stacking wool, linen and cotton: these are only some of the techniques and materials that have seen her undermine conventional artistic categories and their hierarchical relationships. A pupil of Josef Albers at Yale, Sheila Hicks is the heir to both a Modernist spirit that holds the distinctions between the art, decoration and design to be unimportant and a textile practice that has its roots in pre-Columbian America.

If Sheila Hicks chose textiles, it is because from clothes to furniture, interior decoration and on to the canvas that undergirds the high art of painting, these are materials that life constantly puts in our way, in a vast variety of contexts. It also allows works to remain alive, taking different forms each time they are shown. Ductile and tactile, Hicks's work occupies a singular place in the art of our time. It combines forms typical of modernism with non-Western traditions, the play of colour, and a concern to maintain the vital openness of the work.

FRIEZE

The Textile Anthropology of Sheila Hicks

A show at Alison Jacques highlights the artist's technical prowess and use of colour but lacks critical discussion of her processes

BY TOM JEFFREYS IN EXHIBITION REVIEWS | 07 NOV 23

The tactility of Sheila Hicks's textile works – from delicate, wall-mounted weavings to squishy, room-filling installations – provides a neat counterpoint to the crispness of Alison Jacques's new space. The main, ground-floor gallery allows plenty of room for visitors to encounter works that traverse multiple scales and materials. The selection, which spans Hicks's career, showcases the artist's technical innovation and glorious way with colour. For example, stretching nearly five metres along one wall, Talking Sticks (2021–23) consists of dozens of bamboo batons wound with multicoloured lengths of linen, cotton, silk and nylon. In contrast, older works on a more intimate scale, such as Fimbria (2018), incorporate surprising materials including slate, feathers and razor clam shells. Complex entanglements of elements draw you in: Mirage in the Oasis (2023), for instance, is a gorgeous mix of threads in pistachio green, fleshy pinks and gold.

Sheila Hicks, Mirage in the Oasis, 2023, linen, silk, cotton, 1.2 × 1 m. Courtesy: Alison Jacques, London; photograph: Michael Brzezinski

Downstairs, in the smaller basement spaces, the meeting of art and architecture is less successful. The soundtrack from Cristobal Zanartu's film of Hicks's life, Opening the Archives (1995), while informative, spills out across the spaces, disrupting one's engagement with the works. Together Is Better (2023) is a cluster of wall-mounted domes, formed from threads of varying thickness in linen, cotton and wool whose subtle variations of pale cream tones would benefit from a quieter environment. Nearby, the beautifully gauzy raffia Veils I–IV (2023) hang from the ceiling, dividing the space with precision. Yet, this small gallery contains too many other works to afford the Veils' delicately crumpled, almost topographical surfaces the space for contemplation they deserve.

Sheila Hicks, Sunset Contained Forever, 2023, linen mounted on wood with metal support, 1.2 × 1.8 m. Courtesy: Alison Jacques, London; photograph: Michael Brzezinski

The exhibition's most visually impactful moment is the titular Infinite Potential (2023). You walk around the corner from the main space to be surprised by a huge, looming pile of multicoloured pouffy blobs which reach almost eight metres in height. It's dramatic, memorable and fun. In the accompanying list of works, the only material mentioned is 'pigmented acrylic fibre'. Yet, according to a gallery attendant, these large soft shapes are, in fact, held up by repurposed shipping pallets, assembled in the gallery by a group of art students.

In the catalogue published to accompany Hicks's major exhibition, 'Off Grid', at Hepworth Wakefield in 2022, curator Andrew Bonacina underlined the artist's 'global travels' as a key influence upon her work over the past eight decades. According to Bonacina, Hicks travelled 'as a textile anthropologist: collaborating, learning, observing, interpreting'. The analogy with anthropology is telling. As Grant Klarich Johnson wrote in The Brooklyn Rail in 2018: 'Hicks cut her teeth in a proto-feminist art world long before charges of cultural appropriation questioned who could speak for whom, and has never mobilized her work as a vehicle for explicit critique.'

Sheila Hicks, Infinite Potential, 2023, pigmented acrylic fibre, 2.7 × 7.9 m.

I feel a more rigorous discussion that included reflection on Hicks's positionality in relation to her eclectic influences, which include Mexican textile traditions and pre-Inca cultures, would not detract from her work's significance; it would enrich it. 'Infinite Potential' does not take the opportunity to develop such a discussion. Although most of the works included are new or recent, the exhibition seems to repeat familiar narratives: the formative influence of early mentors; Hicks's many collaborations with architects; and the importance of travel, especially in South America. Aside from a brief mention of environmental responsibility via the occasional use of some recycled materials, the show presents a wealth of elegant objects but leaves me with a desire for more criticality surrounding their conceptual and material formation.

Sheila Hicks: Infinite Potential is on view at Alison Jaques, London, until 18 November 2023

OBSERVING HER SURROUNDINGS IN THE COURTYARD

Hicks, 87, photographed in the Cour de Rohan in Paris on Dec. 17, 2021.
Antoine Henault

I arrived in Paris in the mid-60s and have always lived within three blocks of where I'm based now, in the Courde Rohan, a series of three courtyards right in the middle of the city. It's very picturesque, with its big green iron gates and its cobblestones, and at the entrance is the Tower of Philip Augustus, part of the old city walls built around 1400. This little area was the seat of the French Revolution, where people wrote and distributed Le Journal du Peuple, a run of pamphlets intended to get things moving in the right direction and inspire the elimination of all the aristocrats. It's a place full of ghosts because of its history. But I mostly ignore all that; you can't be haunted by the past.

I live on the upper floors of my building, and my studio's on the ground floor. Still, work could just as easily happen while I'm in the stairway and looking out the window at how someone's trimming the trees, or once I've stepped into the courtyard, which is where I hang out. To one side of the house is Le Procope, the oldest restaurant in Paris, where diners eat on the sidewalk, and on the other side live various creative people. One's a designer for the opera. Another organizes fashion shows. And the Giacometti Foundation has moved into the building in front of my studio. So it's a cloistered but animated existence.

I tend to sleep in four-hour segments, and I move very seamlessly between dreams and waking periods. When you see my work, you might be able to wend your way into the cave of the dream world. There're times when I have to make an effort even to know what day it is. And I like to work simultaneously on many things. For instance, today I was asked to create an environmental work at King's Cross, near the London train station, for the summer months. I'm also making something for a municipal complex by the port in Oslo to coincide with the opening of that city's Museum of Modern Art. Tomorrow, we're presenting models for tapestries to the Gobelins Manufactory. And then I have an exhibition up now at the Barbara Hepworth Museum in Yorkshire, England. I do whatever I think is interesting.

I move from idea to finished work acrobatically — it's as though I can feel the clouds shifting and the light coming and going. But because I frequently use fiber and textiles, I'm also quite specific in the way I work; unlike a video artist or a digital artist, I'm physically engaged in the creation of all my work. It's a manual practice but filtered through the optics of architecture, photography, form, material and color. A couple of years ago, I received an honorary doctorate from my school — I went to Yale in the '50s — and it made me very happy because it validated my choice to work and live as an artist. It meant that I could contribute something to the other fields, and so I'm seeking out what that might be, unlike many artists, who are seeking simply to express themselves.

This interview has been edited and condensed.
